Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Strengthening the integrity of the certified cultural property regime

The budget proposes two measures to secure the benefits of Canadian cultural property donations for all Canadians and to ensure that the generous tax incentives for charitable donations are based on the fair market value of the property donated, as determined by the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board.

[First measure reproduced with resolution (29) under 207.3 — ed.]

In addition, the budget proposes that, where the fair market value of a property has been determined by the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board, that value will apply to the property for all income tax purposes related to charitable donations and gifts for a period of two years from the date of the determination. This measure will apply to determinations of fair market value made by the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board after February 23, 1998.

Proposed Addition — Training of caregiver

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: Medical expense tax credit

(20) That, for the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, there be added to the list of expenses eligible for the medical expense tax credit reasonable expenses for the training of an individual in connection with care to be provided to a person who

(a) is related to the individual,

(b) has a mental or physical infirmity, and

(c) is a member of the individual's household or is dependent on the individual for support.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Training expenses for caregivers

The medical expense tax credit (METC) recognizes the burden of above-average medical expenses by providing tax relief for eligible medical expenses. For 1998, the METC reduces the federal tax of a claimant by 17% of qualifying unreimbursed medical expenses in excess of the lesser of 3% of net income and $1,614.

The budget proposes to allow supporting individuals to claim under the METC expenses for training courses related to the care of dependent relatives with mental or physical infirmities.

This measure is effective for 1998 and subsequent years.

(a.2) in the case of

(i) a sight impairment, a medical doctor or an optometrist,

(ii) a hearing impairment, a medical doctor or an audiologist, and

Proposed Amendment — Certification by occupational therapist or psychologist

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: (21) That, after February 24, 1998 for the purpose of the disability tax credit, persons authorized to practice as

(a) occupational therapists be allowed to certify the existence of a severe and prolonged impairment with respect to an individual's ability to walk or to feed and dress oneself, and

(b) psychologists be allowed to certify the existence of a severe and prolonged impairment with respect to an individual's ability to perceive, think and remember.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Certification of the Disability Tax Credit by occupational therapists and psychologists

The DTC provides tax relief to individuals with a severe and prolonged mental or physical impairment that markedly restricts their ability to perform basic activities of daily living: perceiving, thinking and remembering; feeding and dressing oneself; speaking; hearing; eliminating (bowel or bladder functions); and walking. Eligibility for the credit must currently be certified by either a medical doctor, an optometrist (for sight impairments), or an audiologist (for hearing impairments).

To improve the DTC application process, the budget proposes to allow occupational therapists and psychologists to certify eligibility for the credit after February 24, 1998. Occupational therapists will be allowed to certify eligibility in respect of mobility impairments while psychologists will assess eligibility in respect of intellectual impairments.

(b) the individual has filed for a taxation year with the Minister the certificate described in paragraph (a.2), and

(c) no amount in respect of remuneration for an attendant or care in a nursing home, in respect of the individual, is included in calculating a deduction under section 118.2 (otherwise than because of paragraph 118.2(2)(b.1)) for the year by the individual or by any other person, for the purposes of computing the tax payable under this Part by the individual for the year, there may be deducted an amount determined by the formula

$$A \times $4,118^{15}$$

where

A is the appropriate percentage for the year.

Proposed Amendment — Education credit for part-time students

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: Part-time education

(5) That provisions relating to the part-time education of individuals be introduced in accordance with the proposals described in the Budget Papers tabled by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on February 24, 1998.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Tax relief for part-time students

More than one-third of all students, including a significant number of adults, are enrolled in part-time studies. However, apart from the tuition credit, little tax relief is available to those engaged in part-time education. The budget proposes to increase tax assistance to part-time students by allowing them to claim the education credit and the child care expense deduction. This measure is effective for 1998 and subsequent years.

To be eligible for the part-time education credit, students will be required to be enrolled at an educational institution in Canada in an eligible program lasting at least three consecutive weeks, and involving a minimum of 12 hours of courses each month. For each month during which these conditions are satisfied, the student will be entitled to an education amount of $60, on which a 17-per-cent tax credit is provided. An eligible student may claim either one part-time education credit or one full-time education credit in respect of a particular month, but not both. As with the full-time education credit, the unused portion of the part-time credit arising in any year may be transferred to a supporting person or carried forward for future use by the student.

These two measures will provide tax relief of $90 million per year.

Proposed Addition — Credit for interest paid on student loans

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: (3) That, for the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, an individual be entitled to deduct, in computing tax payable for the year under Part I of the Act, 17 per cent of amounts paid in the year or in any of the 5 preceding taxation years ending after 1997 on account of interest on a loan under the Canada Student Loans Act or a provincial statute governing the granting of financial assistance to students at the post-secondary school level.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Tax relief for interest on student loans

To ease the burden of student debt, the budget proposes to allow all individuals repaying student loans to claim a credit on the interest they pay.

A non-refundable federal credit of 17% will be provided on the interest portion of student loan payments made in the year. The proposed credit covers interest only, not repayments of principal. It does not apply to interest accrued but not paid or to any forgiven interest.

The credit applies to interest payments on loans, both new and outstanding, approved under the Canada Student Loans Program and provincial student loan programs.

The credit may be claimed in the year it is earned or in any of the following five years. It is not transferable.

Statements reporting eligible interest payments will be provided to taxpayers by financial institutions or, where appropriate, by the Department of Human Resources Development Canada and provincial government departments administering these loans.

This measure is effective for 1998 and subsequent years, and is expected to provide tax relief of about $130 million in 1999-2000.

118.91 Part-year residents — Notwithstanding sections 118 to 118.9, where an individual is resident in Canada throughout part of a taxation year and throughout another part of the year is non-resident, for the purpose of computing the individual's tax payable under this Part for the year,

(a) the amount deductible for the year under each such provision in respect of the part of the year that is not included in the period or periods referred to in paragraph (b) shall be computed as though such part were the whole taxation year; and

(b) the individual shall be allowed only

(i) such of the deductions permitted under subsection 118(3) and sections 118.1, 118.2, 118.5, 118.6 and 118.7 as can reasonably be considered wholly applicable, and

(ii) such part of the deductions permitted under sections 118 (other than subsection 118(3)), 118.3, 118.8 and 118.9 as can reasonably be considered applicable to the period or periods in the year throughout which the individual is resident in Canada, computed as though that period or those periods were the whole taxation year, except that the amount deductible for the year by the individual under each such provision shall not exceed the amount that would have been deductible under that provision had the individual been resident in Canada throughout the year.

(b) determine the amount (in this section referred to as the "average gross income") equal to 1/5 of the amount by which

(i) the total of the amounts determined under paragraph (a) for the years in the averaging period,

exceeds

(ii) the total of the amounts that would be deductible in respect of the losses for the taxation years in the averaging period in computing the taxable income for the year immediately following the year of averaging if the individual's income from the same business for that year were the total of the amounts determined under paragraph (a) for the years in the averaging period,

(c) determine the amount (in this section referred to as the "average net income") for each year in the averaging period equal to the average gross income minus the deductions permitted for that year by section 109 of the Income Tax Act, chapter 148 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952,

(d) determine the amount (in this section referred to as the "average tax") for each year in the averaging period equal to the tax that would be payable under this Part for the year if the taxable income for the year were the average net income for the year and no amount were deductible under subsection 127(5) for the year,

(e) determine the amount, if any, by which

(i) the total of the average taxes as determined under paragraph (d)

exceeds

(ii) the total of all amounts each of which is an amount deducted under subsection 127(5) in computing the tax payable for the preceding years other than any amount deemed by subsection 127.1(3) to have been so deducted,

(f) where

(i) the total of all amounts each of which is the amount deemed by subsection 120(2) to have been paid on account of tax under this Part for a preceding year in the averaging period,

exceeds

(ii) the amount that would be determined under subparagraph (i) if the taxable income for each preceding year were the average net income for that year, add to the amount, if any, determined under paragraph (e) the amount of that excess,

(g) where paragraph (f) does not apply, deduct from the amount, if any, determined under paragraph (e) the amount, if any, by which

(i) the amount determined under subparagraph (f)(ii)

exceeds

(ii) the amount determined under subparagraph (f)(i), and

(h) deduct from the amount resulting from the application of paragraph (f) or (g), as the case may be, the total of the taxes payable under this Part for the preceding years computed without reference to section 120.2, and the remainder, if any, obtained under paragraph (h) is the tax payable under this Part for the year of averaging and no further deduction may be made therefrom under any other provision of this Part except subsection 127(5).

(b) in any other case, the lesser of

(i) the prescribed proportion of the amount determined under section 123.2 in respect of the corporation for the year, and

"unused Part I.3 tax credit" of a corporation for a taxation year means

(a) where the year ended before 1992, the amount, if any, by which its tax payable under Part I.3 for the year exceeds the amount deductible under subsection (1) in computing its tax payable under this Part for the year, and

(b) where the year ends after 1991, the amount, if any, by which the corporation's tax payable under Part I.3 for the year (determined without reference to subsection 181.1(4)) exceeds its Canadian surtax payable under this Part for the year.

History: "Unused Part I.3 tax credit" in subsec. 125.3(4) amended by 1994, c. 7, Sch. VIII (1993, c. 24), subsec. 66(2), applicable for the purpose of computing the amount that may be deducted under subsec. 125.3(1) for taxation years ending after June 1989. The definition formerly read:

> "unused Part I.3 tax credit" of a corporation for a taxation year means the amount, if any, by which the corporation's tax payable under Part I.3 for the year exceeds the amount deductible under subsection (1) in computing its tax payable under this Part for the year.

Pre-RSC History [s. 125.3]: S. 125.3 added by 1990, c. 39, s. 29, applicable (by subsec. 29(2), as amended by 1991, c. 49, s. 254) to taxation years ending after June 1989 except that, in its application to a taxation year of a corporation commencing before July 1989, the definition "Canadian surtax payable" in subsec. 125.3(4) shall be read as follows:

> "Canadian surtax payable" of a corporation for a taxation year means that proportion of
> (a) in the case of a corporation that is throughout the year not resident in Canada, the amount determined under section 123.2 in respect of the corporation for the year, and
> (b) in any other case, the prescribed proportion of the amount determined under section 123.2 in respect of the corporation for the year
> that the number of days in the year that are after June 1989 is of the number of days in the year;

The amendment ensures that the definition applies without reference to the new surtax credit provided under Part I.3 (see subsec. 181.1(4)). In other words, Part I.3 liability, for purposes of calculating the amount of any excess of that liability over Canadian surtax payable, is determined before accounting for the reduction of Part I.3 tax by the new surtax credit.

(a) such part of any non-business-income tax paid by the taxpayer for the year to the government of a country other than Canada (except, where the taxpayer is a corporation, any such tax or part thereof that may reasonably be regarded as having been paid by the taxpayer in respect of income from a share of the capital stock of a foreign affiliate of the taxpayer) as the taxpayer may claim,

(A) for the year, if section 114 is not applicable, or

(B) if section 114 is applicable, for the period or periods in the year referred to in paragraph 114(a),

(E) where the taxpayer is an individual,

(I) no amount was deducted under subsection 91(5) in computing the taxpayer's income for the year, and

(II) if the taxpayer deducted an amount under subsection 122.3(1) from the taxpayer's tax otherwise payable under this Part for the year, the taxpayer's income from employment in that country was not from a source in that country to the extent of the lesser of the amounts determined in respect thereof under paragraphs 122.3(1)(c) and (d) for the year,

is of

Proposed Amendment — Treaty-protected foreign income

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: Foreign tax credit: treaty-protected foreign income

(38) That, for the purposes of determining the foreign tax credit for taxation years that end after 1997, there be included in computing a taxpayer's income, but excluded in computing the taxpayer's income from a country other than Canada,

(a) the taxpayer's income or loss for the year from a business carried on in that country, where any income of the taxpayer for the year from the business would be tax-exempt in that country,

(b) the taxpayer's property income or loss for the year from a source in that country, where any income of the taxpayer for the year from the property would be tax-exempt in that country,

(c) the taxpayer's capital gain or loss in the year from a property, where any gain of the taxpayer from a disposition of the property in the year would be tax-exempt in that country, and

(d) the taxpayer's income or loss for the year from the duties of an office or employment performed in that country, where any income for the year from such duties would be tax-exempt in that country, and, for the purposes of this paragraph, income or gain shall be considered to be tax-exempt in a country where

(e) under an agreement between Canada and that country, the income or gain could be exempt from any income or profits tax, imposed in that country, to which the agreement applies, and

(f) the income or gain would not be subject to any income or profits tax imposed in that country to which the agreement does not apply.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Foreign tax credit and treaty-protected foreign income

Canadian residents are subject to income tax on their worldwide income. To prevent double taxation of income earned in foreign countries, Canada allows taxpayers to claim a foreign tax credit (FTC) for income tax paid in foreign jurisdictions.

Generally speaking, under current rules a resident taxpayer is entitled to deduct from the taxpayer's Canadian tax the amount of foreign income tax paid in a country to the extent the foreign tax does not exceed that proportion of the taxpayer's Canadian tax otherwise payable that the taxpayer's income in that country bears to the taxpayer's total income. This formula reflects the notion that the FTC should only be available to reduce Canadian tax that is attributable to the foreign income. Given the effect of tax treaties, however, this formula in some cases applies too broadly.

Income of a Canadian resident from a source in a foreign country is sometimes made exempt from tax in that country by the terms of a tax treaty between Canada and that country. Under the current FTC formula, Canadian tax on the exempt foreign income is available for reduction by the credit even though no foreign tax is payable with respect to that income. To correct this anomaly, the budget proposes to amend the FTC limit so that such treaty-protected foreign income is excluded from foreign income in determining the ratio of income from that country to total income. Treaty-protected foreign income will continue to enter into the formula, however, if it is subject to an income or profits tax to which the treaty does not apply (such as a tax imposed by the government of a political subdivision of the foreign country).

This proposal applies in calculating FTCs for the 1998 and subsequent taxation years.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Foreign tax credit limits

A taxpayer may earn a foreign tax credit (FTC) as a result of paying foreign tax on foreign-source income but be unable to use the credit. This may occur because the taxpayer is either exempt from Canadian tax (as in the case of pension funds, RRSPs and other deferred income plans) or not currently taxable because of current losses, loss carry- forwards, or other tax preferences. A non-resident likewise may pay foreign taxes for which a credit is not available in the non-resident's country of residence.

A person who is subject to a foreign withholding tax on particular income, but is unable to obtain an FTC, can sometimes effectively transfer that income to another person who is able to use the tax as a credit against Canadian tax on income from other sources in that foreign country. This type of trading in tax credits is inappropriate if the amount of foreign tax credited is excessive relative to the pre-tax profit generated by the transaction.

In order to limit this type of activity, the budget proposes two new rules. The first rule applies only to short-term securities acquisitions and only when the more general second rule described below does not deny an FTC. The first rule will restrict the amount of foreign withholding tax in respect of dividends and interest on a foreign security that is creditable under the foreign tax credit by reference to the gross profit realized by the taxpayer from the underlying security. The second rule will deny the credit where the profit from a property, net of foreign tax, is not material relative to the amount of foreign tax. These rules will apply to property acquired after February 23, 1998.

Short-term securities acquisitions

The application of withholding taxes to dividend and interest payments on foreign shares and debts can create opportunities to trade in FTCs by means of trading in the securities themselves. For example, a taxpayer (the buyer) purchases a foreign share or bond from its owner (the holder) before payment of a dividend or interest. The after-tax value of the income payment is greater to the buyer than to the holder because the buyer is able to claim a credit for the foreign tax. The purchase price reflects the value of the underlying security plus the value of the declared dividend or the accrued interest (net of any foreign withholding tax payable). The buyer receives the dividend or interest, out of which foreign tax has been withheld, and then resells the share at its value net of that payment either to the holder (possibly at a pre-agreed price) or in the market.

In this type of transaction, the time period between purchase and sale is typically quite short. If the security is resold to the original owner at a pre-agreed price, that party effectively retains its economic interest in the security while it is in the hands of the buyer. In all cases, the purchase price may be set so that some of the benefit of the FTC is transferred to the original holder as compensation for entering into the arrangement. This type of transaction is illustrated in the first example below.

To counter this type of arrangement, the budget proposes to introduce a new rule applicable where a taxpayer disposes of a share or debt not held as capital property within one year of its acquisition. In general terms, the amount of foreign withholding tax eligible to be recognized for FTC purposes will be limited to 40 per cent or 30 per cent (depending on whether the foreign tax constitutes business or non-business income tax) of the taxpayer's gross profit from the share or debt. Withholding tax for this purpose includes any tax levied on the gross amount of the income payment. Gross profit from the security will include both the income payment and any gain or loss on resale. This rule will ensure that the FTC provisions continue to prevent double taxation of the net income earned from the share or debt, while limiting the tax benefits that can shelter other unrelated income.

Denial of credit where profit is not material

Trading in FTCs is not limited to situations involving short-term securities acquisitions. A case of FTC trading through an interest rate swap is set out in the second example below.

In response, the budget proposes a more general rule that will apply where a taxpayer has acquired a property and it is reasonable to expect that the profit from the property, and from other transactions entered into as part of the arrangement in which the property was acquired, will not be material in relation to the amount of foreign income tax paid on income from the property that would otherwise be eligible for the FTC. This rule will apply more broadly to income and profits taxes and not only to withholding taxes.

Under this rule, profit will be calculated by deducting the expected direct costs of acquiring, holding and disposing of the property and any foreign tax expected to be payable on income from the property. Direct costs of acquisition would include, for example, financing costs incurred for the purpose of acquiring the property. Where the profit thus calculated is not material in relation to the foreign tax, that tax will not be eligible to be recognized for purposes of calculating the taxpayer's FTC. Instead, a deduction from income will be allowed, but only to the extent of the taxpayer's income in respect of the property.

Example

Holder has a bond of a foreign corporation with an underlying value of $100, on which a regular $5 interest payment is about to be paid. The interest is subject to a 15-per-cent withholding tax in the source country, so that Holder would receive $4.25 net after 75 cents in foreign tax had been withheld. Holder is not able to use an FTC.

Buyer purchases the foreign bond just prior to the interest payment date for $104.50, and receives the $5 interest payment on which 75 cents has been withheld. A few months later, Buyer sells the bond either back to the Holder or on the market, for $101, the appreciation reflecting the interest accrued during the holding period. This transaction on its face is moderately profitable to Buyer:

Proceeds	$101.00
Interest	5.00
Less: Acquisition cost	(104.50)
Taxable income	1.50
Less: Foreign tax withheld	(0.75)
Economic profit (loss) before Canadian tax	$0.75

Under existing rules, however, Buyer would be entitled to include the full 75 cents of foreign tax in its pool of foreign business or non-business income tax eligible for the FTC in respect of that particular country. Assuming that Buyer faces a 30-per-cent Canadian federal tax rate, 45 cents of the FTC would be needed to offset the tax payable on the $1.50 of taxable income from the transaction. This would leave Buyer with an FTC balance of 30 cents, which could be used to offset tax on income from other sources in that country. The availability of the FTC significantly enhances Buyer's return from the transaction:

Economic profit (loss) before Canadian tax	$0.75
Unused foreign tax credit balance	0.30
Profit after Canadian tax	$1.05

The proposed rule would limit the amount of foreign taxes eligible for credit to 30 per cent (assuming the income is not connected with a foreign business) of Buyer's gross profit from the share ($1.50): 45 cents. Therefore, while the FTC would eliminate the Canadian tax payable in respect of the transaction, no excess credit would be available to offset tax on income from other sources.

Example

Assume a tax-exempt investor (Investor) wishes to borrow funds at short-term interest rates (say, 7 per cent) in order to purchase a $1,000 long-term foreign bond which pays interest at 8 per cent. Investor is not able to use the credit for the 15-per-cent non-resident withholding tax payable in the country of source on the bond interest. (Even though the return after withholding tax is only 6.8 per cent, which is lower than the 7 per cent cost of funds, Investor anticipates that the bond will appreciate due to interest rate movements.)

If the foreign interest payments are channelled through Taxpayer who is able to use an FTC, both parties can effectively obtain some benefit from the foreign tax credit. Taxpayer borrows funds at the short-term rate and buys the bond. At the same time, it enters into an interest rate "swap" agreement with Investor: Investor agrees that it will reimburse Taxpayer for the 7 per cent interest expense on the short-term loan, while Taxpayer agrees to pay over to Investor the net interest payments received on the bond, which Investor would otherwise have received directly (6.8 per cent), plus an additional 0.3 per cent to make the arrangement attractive to Investor. The arrangement could be set up to operate over a period of several years.

Before Canadian tax, the transaction would create a loss for Taxpayer:

Interest income on bond	$80.00
Income (loss) on swap agreement ($70 from Investor minus $71 to Investor)	(1.00)
Interest expense on short-term loan	(70.00)
Taxable income	9.00
Less: Foreign tax withheld	(12.00)
Economic profit (loss) before Canadian tax	($3.00)

Taxpayer, however, would be entitled under existing rules to add the $12.00 of withholding tax to its pool of potentially creditable foreign tax. Assuming that taxpayer faces a 40 per cent Canadian tax rate, $3.60 of the FTC would be needed to offset the tax payable on $9.00 of taxable income from the transaction. This leaves an FTC balance of $8.40 which could be used to offset taxes on income from other sources in the foreign country. The availability of the FTC makes an otherwise unprofitable transaction attractive for Taxpayer:

Economic profit (loss) before Canadian tax	($3.00)
Unused FTC balance	8.40
Profit (loss) after Canadian tax	$5.40

In this case, the second proposed rule would apply since, after foreign taxes, the anticipated profit to Taxpayer from the bond and the related swap agreement — in fact, a $3.00 loss — is not material in relation to the foreign tax of $12.00 otherwise creditable. The rule would deny the FTC. Instead, Taxpayer would be entitled to deduct the $12.00 in foreign tax from its $9.00 in income in respect of the property, to the extent of that income. Taxpayer's income for Canadian tax purposes from the transaction therefore could be reduced to zero, but no credit would be available to shelter other income.

Proposed Amendment — Negative ITCs where materials disposed of

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: Scientific research and experimental development

(35) That, for the purpose of determining the amount of a taxpayer's investment tax credit in respect of scientific research and experimental development, where

(a) the cost of a material was included in an amount a percentage of which was included in the taxpayer's investment tax credit at the end of any taxation year, and

(b) after February 23, 1998, the taxpayer disposes of, or converts to commercial use, a property that contains the material, the taxpayer's investment tax credit be reduced by the amount obtained by applying that percentage to the lesser of

(c) either

(i) where the material was acquired by the taxpayer from a person with whom the taxpayer was dealing at arm's length, the cost to the taxpayer of the material, or

(ii) in any other case, the fair market value of the material at the time it was acquired by the taxpayer, and

(d) either

(i) where the property is disposed of to a person who deals at arm's length with the taxpayer, the proceeds of disposition of the property, or

(ii) in any other case, the fair market value of the property at the time of the disposition or conversion to commercial use and, for these purposes, where the amounts required to be deducted from a taxpayer's investment tax credit exceed the amounts required to be added thereto at the end of a taxation year, the excess be added to the taxpayer's tax payable under Part I of the Act for the year.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Prevent unintended benefits under the SR&ED regime

The cost of materials used in scientific research and experimental development (SR&ED) does not generally qualify for the SR&ED tax incentives unless it is consumed in the course of performing the SR&ED. At the outset of an SR&ED project, a taxpayer may not know whether materials used in a project will be consumed or will instead be incorporated into a product that has some value either to the taxpayer or to another party.

Therefore, the budget proposes to allow as eligible SR&ED inputs, both materials that have been consumed as well as materials that will be transformed into another product in the course of performing SR&ED. Where, however, the product of the SR&ED project is sold or converted to commercial use, taxpayers will be required to reduce their SR&ED investment tax credit (ITC) pools by the lesser of the proceeds of disposition of property and the cost of the SR&ED materials included in the property. If these calculations result in an investment tax credit pool balance that is less than zero, the taxpayer will be required to repay the negative ITC that year.

This "netting" provision will apply to dispositions and conversions of property after February 23, 1998.

A is the cost to the supplier of rendering the particular service,

B is the total of all amounts each of which is the amount, if any, by which

(a) the cost to the supplier for a service (other than a service rendered by a person as an employee of the supplier) rendered by a person or partnership that does not deal at arm's length with the supplier to the extent that the cost is incurred for the purpose of rendering the particular service

(b) the adjusted service cost to the person or partnership referred to in paragraph (a) of rendering the service referred to in that paragraph to the supplier,

C is the total of all amounts each of which is the amount, if any, by which

(a) the cost to the supplier of a property acquired by the supplier from a person or partnership that does not deal at arm's length with the supplier

exceeds

to the extent that the excess relates to the cost of rendering the particular service,

A is

(a) where the property is purchased from another person or partnership with which the supplier does not deal at arm's length, the lesser of

(i) the cost to the supplier of the property, and

(ii) the adjusted selling cost to the other person or partnership of the property, and

and for the purpose of paragraph (b),

(c) where part of the cost to a supplier of a particular property is attributable to another property acquired by the supplier from a person or partnership with which the supplier does not deal at arm's length, that part of the cost is deemed to be the lesser of

(i) the amount of that part of the cost otherwise determined, and

(ii) the adjusted selling cost to the person or the partnership of the other property,

(d) where part of the cost to a supplier of a property is attributable to a service (other than a service rendered by a person as an employee of the supplier) rendered to the supplier by a person or partnership with which the supplier does not deal at arm's length, that part of the cost is deemed to be the lesser of

(i) the amount of that part of the cost otherwise determined, and

(a) the cost to a person or partnership (referred to in this paragraph as the "supplier") of rendering a service or providing a property to another person or partnership (referred to in this paragraph as the "recipient") with which the supplier does not deal at arm's length does not include,

(i) where the cost to the recipient of the service rendered or property provided by the supplier would, but for this paragraph, be a cost to the recipient incurred in rendering a particular service or providing a particular property to a person or partnership with which the recipient does not deal at arm's length, any expenditure of the supplier to the extent that it would, if it were incurred by the recipient in rendering the particular service or providing the particular property, be excluded from a cost to the recipient because of this paragraph, and

(ii) in any other case, any expenditure of the supplier to the extent that it would, if it were incurred by the recipient, not be a qualified expenditure of the recipient;

(b) paragraph 69(1)(c) does not apply in determining the cost of a property; and

(c) the leasing of a property is deemed to be the rendering of a service.

Extension of 1997 LSVCC deadline due to ice storm

Department of Finance and Revenue Canada news releases: [See under 146(5).]

Revenue Canada news release, March 3, 1998: LSVCC Investment Deadline Extension for Qualifying Individuals

What is the impact of the LSVCC investment extension?

As a result of the LSVCC investment extension, qualifying individuals have until the end of March 1998, to invest in LSVCC shares for 1997.

Can you benefit from this extension?

You can benefit from this extension if you are considered a qualifying individual. Revenue Canada will consider you as a qualifying individual if you live in areas whose postal code begins with the letter "B", "E", "G", "H", "J", or "K". This means that you are a qualifying individual if you live in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, or Eastern Ontario regardless of whether you were affected by the storm. You are also considered a qualifying individual if you are a soldier or hydro worker and have been away from your home assisting those affected by the storm.

In certain circumstances, if you volunteered or assisted relatives affected by the ice storm, you may also be considered a qualifying individual. In this case, contact your local tax services office to find out if you are a qualifying individual. Revenue Canada will determine your eligibility on a case by case basis.

How should you complete your 1997 income tax return

If you are a qualifying individual, complete your 1997 income tax return as usual. See lines 413 and 414 in your General Income Tax Guide for information about how to calculate your labour-sponsored funds tax credit and claim the credit on investments you made from March 3 to March 31, 1998 as if they were made before March 3, 1998.

If your LSVCC investment is held within an RRSP, you can find out about the maximum amount you can contribute to an RRSP for 1997 by reading your 1996 Notice of Assessment that you received after you filed your income tax return. You can also call T.I.P.S.–RRSP, which is Revenue Canada's automated phone system. The telephone numbers of T.I.P.S.–RRSP are listed under "Revenue Canada" in the government of Canada section of telephone books.

Filing deadline

As usual, you have to file your 1997 income tax return by April 30, 1998. If you are carrying on business in 1997 or if your spouse is carrying on business in 1997, you have to file your return by June 15, 1998. However, if you have a balance owing for 1997, you still have to pay it by April 30, 1998.

Proposed Amendment — RRSP deductions no longer to be tax preferences

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: Alternative minimum tax

(13) That the provisions relating to the alternative minimum tax be modified

(a) for the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, to allow an individual to deduct, in computing the individual's adjusted taxable income for the year, amounts paid to a registered pension plan or a registered re ement savings plan to the extent that they are deductible in co uting the individual's income for the year, and

(b) for the 1994 to 1997 taxation years, to provide for the refund to an individual who at the end of 1997 is resident in Canada and is not bankrupt of an amount equal to the portion of that tax that

(i) can reasonably be regarded as being attributable to the non-deductibility of one or more amounts referred to in subparagraph (a) in computing the individual's adjusted taxable income for the year, and

(ii) has not been deducted in computing the individual's tax payable under Part I of the Act for any other taxation year.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Alternative minimum tax and RRSPs

Under the alternative minimum tax (AMT), a number of tax preferences are added back to taxable income. The adjusted taxable income is reduced by a basic exemption of $40,000 to ensure that individuals whose total tax preferences do not exceed that amount are not subject to AMT. The remainder is then subject to tax at a rate of 17%, plus applicable surtax and provincial income taxes. The AMT gives rise to additional tax where the tax liability calculated with the AMT is greater than the regular tax liability. Most individuals subject to AMT are able to recoup the additional tax through a seven-year carry-forward mechanism.

Recent developments suggest that the existing rules are unduly restrictive and have unintended consequences in certain circumstances. Of particular importance is the increase in recent years in the number of people who are subject to the AMT due to severance packages they have received on lay-off or voluntary downsizing. In many cases, taxpayers can recover this tax through the seven-year carry-forward provision. However, workers who have low incomes in the years following the termination of employment often cannot do so. This could be the case, for example, where a 50-year-old worker has been laid off and has little or no income until "normal" retirement age. This worker could be forced to draw on after-tax assets — such as guaranteed investment certificates (GICs) or a house — or on RRSP savings, in order to pay the AMT, without the possibility of recovering it within the seven-year period.

Improvements to tax assistance for retirement savings introduced in recent budgets include the indefinite carry-forward of unused RRSP contribution room and the introduction of the pension adjustment reversal which allows individuals to make extra RRSP contributions to compensate for the loss of employer-provided pension benefits. These measures contribute to a continuing increase in high one-time RRSP contributions.

Given the importance of retirement savings to Canadians, and the fact that comprehensive limits already apply to the tax assistance provided for them, the AMT should not further limit the ability of taxpayers to set aside income for their retirement.

Accordingly, the budget proposes that RRSP roll-overs and contributions, as well as contributions to registered pension plans, be exempted from the AMT.

To reflect recent increases in the volume of severance arrangements, this change will be effective from 1994. For taxation years prior to 1998, Revenue Canada will identify affected taxpayers and refunds will be made once the enabling legislation has received Royal Assent.

This measure will provide $70 million in tax relief in 1998-99, as a result of its application to previous years, and about $20 million annually thereafter.

Proposed Amendment — Immigrating corporations

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: Immigrating corporations

(44) That, where a corporation becomes resident in Canada at any time after February 23, 1998,

(a) it be deemed, immediately before that time, to have disposed of each of its properties for proceeds equal to the property's fair market value and to have reacquired each such property at a cost equal to those proceeds,

(b) the paid-up capital of each class of its shares be proportionately increased or reduced at that time so that the total paid-up capital of the corporation upon becoming resident is equal to the amount by which the fair market value of its property exceeds its liabilities,

(c) where the immigrating corporation owned a share of the capital stock of another corporation resident in Canada at that time (other than a share described in subparagraph (45)(b) [see under 212.1 — ed.]), that other corporation be deemed to have paid a dividend to the immigrating corporation, immediately before it became resident, equal to the amount by which the share's fair market value exceeds its paid-up capital at that time, and

(d) for the purpose of computing the immigrating corporation's branch tax payable under Part XIV of the Act for its last taxation year ending before that time, its investment allowance [see 219(1)(j) and Reg. 808 — ed.] be deemed to be nil.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Immigrating corporations

Section 128.1 of the Income Tax Act provides a set of rules applying to taxpayers that become resident in Canada. For corporations, these rules include a deemed year-end immediately before becoming resident, a deemed disposition and reacquisition of all property (other than property which would, ignoring any relevant tax treaty, be subject to tax in Canada), and an adjustment to the corporation's paid-up capital designed to reflect the new net tax cost of its property.

The current rules are designed to defer, but not eliminate, the taxation in Canada of the immigrating corporation's accrued gains on Canadian property, of its surplus from Canadian business operations, and of the surplus of Canadian corporations of which it is a shareholder. However, the sale of the immigrating corporation's shares, before it becomes resident, to a corporation resident in Canada can frustrate this objective.

Example

A non-resident individual owns all the shares of a non-resident corporation (call it "Forco") whose only property is the stock of a Canadian subsidiary ("Canco"). The individual sells the Forco shares to a new Canadian corporation ("Newco") for Newco shares that have a cost and paid-up capital equal to the fair market value of the Forco shares. Such a sale would generally be non-taxable in Canada, since it involves the sale by a non-resident of shares of a non-resident company. After the sale, Forco becomes resident in Canada, with no effect on the tax cost of its shares in Canco. At this point, the surplus of Canco could potentially be remitted through the (now Canadian) corporate chain as non-taxable dividends, and distributed to the non-resident individual as a tax-free return of capital; alternatively, Newco might be sold to an arm's-length purchaser, with the non-resident individual having precluded the application of Canadian capital gains tax as a result of the fair market value cost base created on the prior sale of the Forco shares to Newco.

Although the general anti-avoidance rule may apply in cases such as this [see the RMM Canadian Enterprises (Equilease) case — ed.], it is also appropriate to address more specifically the opportunity for such schemes. To that end, the budget proposes that corporations that become resident in Canada after February 23, 1998 be treated as having disposed of all of their property, including Canadian property, at its fair market value at the time of immigration. Where the immigrating corporation owns a share of a corporation resident in Canada (other than a share on which any gain of the immigrating corporation is taxable in Canada), a dividend equal to the amount by which the share's value exceeds its paid-up capital will be deemed to have been paid to the immigrating corporation before it became resident. In this way, the corporation's immigration is treated in the same manner as a sale of the share for fair market value proceeds by the non-resident corporation to a resident company. Finally, the immigrating corporation will be unable to claim an investment allowance under Part XIV of the Act for its last taxation year in which it was non-resident and, as a result, will be held to account for any branch tax arising in the year or deferred in respect of previous years.

As a consequence of these changes, the current rule in subsection 128.1(2) of the Act will be modified to establish the total paid-up capital of the immigrating corporation, upon it becoming resident in Canada, at a level representing the fair market value of its net assets.

Property used in carrying on business in Canada

(3) That any capital property used by a non-resident person at any time after October 1, 1996 in carrying on a business (other than an insurance business) in Canada, and that ceases at any subsequent time to be so used by that person (otherwise than by reason of the property's disposition) be deemed to have been disposed of by the person for proceeds equal to the property's fair market value at that subsequent time.

Information reporting

(4) That all individuals who cease at any time after 1995 to be Canadian residents and who own at that time property the total fair market value of which is greater than $25,000 be required to provide a report in prescribed form listing each property that they owned at that time (other than a personal-use property that has a fair market value of less than $10,000).

Deemed disposition on emigration

(5) That the deemed disposition on emigration under subsection 128.1(4) of the Act be revised, in respect of an individual who at any time after October 1, 1996 ceases to be resident in Canada, to:

(a) provide for the mandatory deemed disposition and reacquisition at fair market value of all the individual's property other than

(i) real property situated in Canada,

(ii) capital property used in, or property described in an inventory of, a business carried on by the individual through a permanent establishment in Canada immediately before that time, and

(iii) property described in subparagraph 128.1(4)(b)(iii), (v) or (vi) of the Act, and

(b) any property that was taxable Canadian property of a trust and that was distributed by the trust to a beneficiary on or before October 1, 1996 be deemed, for greater certainty, to be taxable Canadian property of the beneficiary after that date.

Technical Background

Taxpayer Migration

1. Overview

This Notice of Ways and Means Motion expresses the Government's intention to recommend certain changes to the income tax rules that apply to taxpayers who enter or leave Canada. Most of these changes are rather technical in nature. The most far-reaching proposals will require a more comprehensive deemed disposition and reacquisition of an emigrant's property, and will impose new reporting requirements on individual emigrants.

The Government recognizes the significance of these proposed changes, and invites Canadians to comment on them as they proceed toward implementation.

2. The current rules

Canada is among the very few countries that impose any special tax rules on individuals who become or cease to be residents. The main purpose of these rules, which have applied since 1972, is to ensure that immigrants and emigrants are taxed in Canada on all their gains on Canadian property, and on other gains that accrued while they were resident in Canada.

Immigration

A taxpayer who becomes a resident of Canada is generally treated as having disposed of and reacquired all of the taxpayer's property at its fair market value. This ensures that Canada will tax only that part of any gain on the property that accrued after the person became resident here. Property in respect of which any gain was already subject to tax in Canada ("taxable Canadian property", or TCP) is not subject to this deemed disposition. That is because Canada's Income Tax Act subjects the full amount of such gains to tax when the property is actually disposed of.

Example

N. moved to Canada from Country A in 1985. At the time of the move, N. owned an apartment building situated in Country A, and one in Canada. Each property cost N. $75,000 (or the equivalent), and each had a fair market value in 1985 of $100,000. N. sold both buildings in 1995, for $125,000 each.

For Canadian tax purposes N. was treated as having disposed of and reacquired the building in Country A for $100,000 before becoming a resident of Canada. N.'s tax cost of the building is now $100,000. Canada will thus tax only the $18,750 taxable capital gain ($25,000 capital gain X 75%) on the building in Country A that accrued while N. was a resident of Canada. Since the Canadian building is taxable Canadian property, N. was not treated as having disposed of it in 1985. Canada will tax, in 1995, the full $37,500 taxable capital gain ($50,000 capital gain X 75%) on that building.

Emigration

A taxpayer who ceases to be resident in Canada is generally treated as having disposed of and reacquired, at fair market value, all the taxpayer's property other than taxable Canadian property, stock options, and certain pension and similar rights. Individuals (other than trusts, which are individuals for tax purposes) can also choose not to be treated as having disposed of any non-TCP, provided they give security for any tax they would otherwise have had to pay.

Example

X. moved to Country B from Canada in 1990. At the time of the move, X. owned an apartment building situated in Country B, and one in Canada. Each property cost X. $75,000 (or the equivalent), and each had a fair market value in 1990 of $100,000. X. sold both buildings in 1995, for $125,000 each.

For Canadian tax purposes X. was treated as having disposed of and reacquired the building in Country B for $100,000 before ceasing to be a resident of Canada. Canada thus taxed the $18,750 taxable capital gain ($25,000 capital gain X 75%) on the Country B building that accrued while X. was a resident of Canada. But Canada will not tax X.'s post-departure gain on that building. Since the Canadian building is taxable Canadian property, X. was not treated as having disposed of it in 1990. Canada will tax the full $37,500 taxable capital gain ($50,000 capital gain X 75%) on that building.

Special rules

Several special rules apply to particular kinds of taxpayer. A Canadian trust, for example, may distribute property to a non-resident beneficiary: the rules treat that distribution as a fair market value disposition, except where the property is taxable Canadian property. Other rules treat property that is acquired on a tax-deferred ("rollover") basis in exchange for TCP as being itself TCP.

3. What will change

The most important changes proposed in this Notice of Ways and Means Motion relate to individuals (including trusts) who emigrate from Canada. First, the class of properties treated as having been sold on emigration will be expanded. Anyone who ceases to be a resident of Canada after October 1, 1996 will be treated as having disposed of and reacquired all property (including taxable Canadian property) other than Canadian real estate, Canadian business property and the properties described in current Income Tax Act subparagraphs 128.1(4)(b)(iii) (pension and other rights), (v) (certain property of short-term residents) and (vi) (stock options). This will have the effect of determining the emigrant's tax liability in respect of any accrued capital gains. The emigrant can either pay the tax immediately, or give Revenue Canada security for paying it later (without interest charges), when the property is actually sold.

Second, all individual emigrants who own property with a total value of more than $25,000 will be required to report their property holdings to Revenue Canada. An exception will be made for any personal-use property (a defined term that includes clothing, household goods, cars, etc.) with a value of less than $10,000. This reporting requirement will apply to all individuals who have left Canada after 1995, and will take the form of a schedule or similar document to be included with those persons' income tax returns for the year they left Canada.

Other changes include:

- Extending to 5 years the period for determining whether certain shares and partnership and trusts interests are taxable Canadian property. This will make it more difficult for non-resident taxpayers to manipulate the status of a share or interest by changing the investment mix of the corporation, partnership or trust.
- Deeming a disposition and reacquisition at fair market value of any capital property (such as shares or bonds held on capital account) that ceases to be used by a non-resident person in carrying on a business in Canada. This will reduce the opportunity for non-residents to avoid Canadian tax by changing the use of a property to benefit from tax-treaty protection.
- Deeming a disposition at fair market value of all property (other than Canadian real estate) distributed by a trust to a non-resident beneficiary (with the trust and beneficiary being provided the right to provide security for the tax otherwise payable), and clarifying that taxable Canadian property distributed by a trust remains taxable Canadian property to the beneficiary.
- Clarifying that property may be taxable Canadian property not only to non-residents, but also to residents of Canada. This will ensure that a number of aspects of the migration rules work as intended.

4. Next steps

The Government invites comment on these proposals. Comments may be directed to the Minister of Finance.

Questions and Answers on Proposed Changes

Background

Q. What events led up to the changes being announced today?

A. The Auditor-General raised certain concerns about a 1991 tax ruling [see ATR-70 — ed.] that allowed a taxpayer to transfer property out of Canada without being subject to immediate capital gains tax in Canada. The Finance Committee examined the issue and found that Revenue Canada's interpretation of the law as it stood in 1991 was legally correct in the context of a system that taxed emigrating Canadians on their property gains only when they ultimately sold the property.

The Committee noted, however, that Canada's right to impose tax on former Canadian residents was sometimes limited under the terms of its tax treaties with other countries. It thus recommended that the system be changed to ensure that Canadian tax be assessed at the point when property is transferred to persons living outside of Canada, or when the individual or trust owning the property leaves the country. These changes implement this recommendation.

Structure of previous system

Q. How did the system work that was in effect before today?

A. The previous system provided that gains on property owned by individuals or trusts when they moved from Canada were either taxable in Canada or, if a tax treaty applied, in their new country of residence, when the property was ultimately sold. Similar rules applied to trust distributions to foreign beneficiaries: either the trust would pay tax when the property was distributed, or the beneficiaries would be liable to tax in Canada or in their country of residence.

Effect on trusts

Q. Will the proposed changes affect transactions like that highlighted in the Auditor General's report?

A. Yes. These changes will ensure that gains on property held in a trust are subject to Canadian tax when the trust moves, or the property is distributed to people who live outside Canada.

The transaction described in the Auditor General's report involved the distribution of Canadian property by a trust to a beneficiary that lived in another country. If that transaction were to take place today, any gains accruing on the property while it was owned by the trust would be subject to Canadian tax — with the tax being payable either on distribution or, where security is provided, when the property is sold by the beneficiary.

Family trusts

Q. Does this eliminate the tax advantages associated with family trusts?

A. This issue is not specifically about family trusts. Any remaining tax advantages that family trusts may have had were eliminated by the changes announced in the 1995 budget.

The changes being made today concern all taxpayers who move out of Canada or who, in the case of trusts, distribute property to persons living outside of Canada. In effect, the changes ensure that gains arising while living in Canada will ultimately be subject to Canadian tax, and they apply equally to individuals and trusts. (Corporations are already taxable on such gains when they leave Canada, and this rule is to be maintained.)

Timing of announcement

Q. Should these changes have been announced before today?

A. The government has acted as soon as it was reasonable to do so. In May of this year the Auditor-General identified a concern with the tax system. The government immediately referred the issue to the Finance Committee, which examined the issue and issued its report two weeks ago. The government is now proposing to implement the Committee's recommendations, with effect as of today.

Retroactivity

Q. Why isn't the government giving these changes retroactive effect?

A. It would be inappropriate and unfair to tell taxpayers that their past actions will now be retroactively taxed under a set of rules that they couldn't have known about before today. The changes announced today reflect a new policy — one that taxpayers will have to take into account in their future affairs.

Consultation

Q. Will there be an opportunity for taxpayers to comment on the proposed changes before they are implemented?

A. The changes are reasonable and responsive to the concerns that the Auditor-General and the Finance Committee raised but, as is the case with all income tax proposals, taxpayers' comments on the effect of these changes are invited and will be taken into account in developing the implementing legislation.

Effect of proposed changes

Q. What do these changes do?

A. Most significantly, the changes will treat individuals and trusts who leave Canada as having realized any gains accrued on their property up to that point in time. They will have the option of paying the tax on those gains when they file their tax return for the year they leave Canada or, by providing security to Revenue Canada, can defer their payment until the property is sold.

In other words, the proposed changes ensure that all emigrants from Canada — including trusts — will pay Canadian tax on any capital gains that have accrued in Canada up to the time of departure. They also apply to ensure that trust distributions to foreign beneficiaries will be subject to Canadian tax. In both cases, the Canadian tax can be paid immediately, or security can be provided to Revenue Canada to pay the tax, without interest charges, when the property is actually sold.

The proposals also include several technical changes:

- to tighten the rules for taxing non-residents of Canada on gains they realize from the sale of interests in partnerships and trusts which have significant interests in Canadian property;
- to ensure that Canadian tax is payable with respect to gains from property used by non-residents in carrying on business in Canada;
- to confirm that the term "taxable Canadian property" applies to Canadian residents as well as non-residents, thus ensuring that a resident planning to leave Canada can't limit the gains which are taxable in Canada by exchanging TCP for non-TCP before he leaves;
- to clarify that Canadian tax with respect to gains on trust property distributed to non-resident beneficiaries before today will (subject to Canada's tax treaties) be taxed in the beneficiaries' hands if the trust wasn't liable to tax itself; and
- to require all individuals and trusts leaving Canada to file an information return reporting all of the significant assets they hold at the point of departure.

Compliance concerns

Q. What new obligations will this place on taxpayers?

A. To minimize any immediate tax burden that these changes might otherwise create, the emigrant will be able to pay the tax when the property is actually sold, provided the emigrant gives Revenue Canada security for that later payment. No interest will be charged on the tax liability during this period.

The changes will also require departing Canadians to file an information return listing all of their significant assets. This return, which in the case of individuals is required to be filed by April 30 of the year following the year of departure, will not be required for taxpayers having property with a total value of less than $25,000.

Department of Finance press release, October 2, 1996:
Taxpayer Migration Rules to be Tightened

Finance Minister Paul Martin today announced major changes to the income tax rules for people who leave Canada. These changes will ensure that taxpayers who move or transfer property from Canada will remain subject to Canadian tax on their gains from such property.

"Canada already has one of the strictest systems in the world when it comes to taxpayer migration," the Minister said. "This will make our system even better."

The Minister noted that the Auditor General had raised the issue of Canada's taxpayer migration rules in his report earlier this year, and that the House of Commons Finance Committee recently made several recommendations for improving Canada's tax system in this regard. Today's changes follow the recommendations of the Committee majority.

"From now on, all emigrants — including trusts — will be subject to Canadian tax on any gains that have accrued up to the time of departure, other than on Canadian real estate and a limited group of other assets — which Canada always retains the right to tax," Mr. Martin explained. "The only people this will not apply to are people who have been in Canada only temporarily."

Until now, emigrants have not been taxed on gains on certain Canadian property at the time they leave. Instead, either Canada or (where a tax treaty applies) their new country taxes those gains when they actually dispose of the property.

People who leave Canada under the new rules will calculate their tax as though they had disposed of all their property other than Canadian real estate and certain other assets. They can either pay the tax immediately or give Revenue Canada security for paying it at a later date.

In addition, today's changes implement the technical recommendations put forward by the Committee, including those regarding trusts that distribute property to non-residents.

A copy of the Notice of Ways and Means Motion tabled by the Minister today, accompanied by the Minister's remarks on tabling, is attached. A technical background note and a series of questions and answers relating to the changes are also attached.

the amendment applies to the corporation, with respect to the particular person and persons related to the particular person, only as provided in subsections (4) to (11) [of the amending legislation].

Subsection (4) to (11) of the amending legislation provide:

(4) [The amendments] apply to a corporation that was a mortgage investment corporation at the beginning of January 15, 1998 for a taxation year that ends after January 14, 1998 where, after January 14, 1998 and before the end of the year, a particular person described in paragraph [(b) of the application] contributed capital to the corporation or acquired a share of the capital stock of the corporation, other than a share described in paragraph (5)(a), (b) or (c).

paragraph 130.1(6)(d) of the Act, as enacted by subsection (1), shall be read, with respect to the particular person and the corporation for the year, as though the reference in that paragraph to "25%" were a reference to "the specified percentage", and, for any class of shares of the capital stock of the corporation, the "specified percentage" were the percentage of the shares of that class held at the beginning of January 15, 1998 by that person and other persons with whom that person did not deal at arm's length at that time.

(6) [The amendments] apply to a corporation that was a mortgage investment corporation at the beginning of January 15, 1998 for a taxation year that ends after January 14, 1998 where, at any particular time after January 14, 1998 and before the end of the year, a newly related person in respect of the corporation

(9) Where

(a) a corporation was a mortgage investment corporation at the beginning of January 15, 1998, and

(b) a mortgage lender is a person described in paragraph [(b) of the application] in respect of the corporation for a taxation year that ends after 2007,

[the amendments] apply to the corporation for the year and all subsequent taxation years.

(a) where at a particular time

(i) a trust that existed at the beginning of January 15, 1998 distributes a share of the capital stock of a corporation to a person who was a beneficiary under the trust throughout the period from the beginning of January 15, 1998 to the particular time in satisfaction of all or any part of the beneficiary's capital interest in the trust, or

(ii) a partnership that existed at the beginning of January 15, 1998 distributes, to a person who was a member of the partnership throughout the period from the beginning of January 15, 1998 to the particular time, on the partnership ceasing to exist or on the ceasing of the person to be a member of the partnership, a share of the capital stock of a corporation or an interest in such a share,

(b) where a person who is a beneficiary under a trust or a member of a partnership is deemed by paragraph (b), (c) or (e) of the definition "specified shareholder" in subsection 248(1) of the Act to own a share owned by the trust or partnership, the person is deemed to own the share and to have acquired the share at the later of the time the share was acquired by the trust or partnership and the time the person last became a beneficiary under the trust or a member of the partnership.

(11) For the purposes of this section, a mortgage lender at any particular time means

(i) the particular corporation or particular partnership, or

(ii) a corporation or partnership which was affiliated with the particular corporation or particular partnership both at the particular time and at the other time included the holding of debts owing to it that were secured, whether by mortgage or in any other manner, on houses (as defined in section 2 of the National Housing Act) or on property included within a housing project (as defined in that section), or

(b) a partnership any member of which is a mortgage lender.

Technical Notes: Section 130.1 of the Act sets out rules that apply to mortgage investment corporations and their shareholders. Subsection 130.1(6) defines "mortgage investment corporation" for these purposes.

Paragraph 130.1(6)(d) requires that no shareholder hold more than 25% of the shares of the corporation. This amendment expands that rule so that no shareholder may hold more than 25% of the shares of any class. Also, a person will be considered for the purpose of the 25% test to own not only any shares which that person actually owns, but also (1) any shares owned by persons with whom that person does not deal at arm's length, and (2) a proportionate number of any shares held by a trust under which that person is a beneficiary or a partnership of which that person is a member.

More specifically, under amended paragraph 130.1(6)(d), a corporation will be a mortgage investment corporation throughout a taxation year only where, throughout the year, no person would have been a specified shareholder of the corporation if in the preamble to the definition "specified shareholder" in subsection 248(1): (1) the reference to "not less than 10%" were read as "more than 25%", and (2) the reference to shares of any other corporation related to the corporation were deleted. For this purpose, the definition "specified shareholder" is to be read without reference to its paragraph (d), which is not relevant to mortgage investment corporations.

The requirement that a mortgage investment corporation have at least twenty shareholders remains. The reference to subsections (7) and (8) is removed as being redundant, since it is clear from those provisions that they apply to paragraph (6)(d).

This amendment generally applies for taxation years that begin after January 14, 1998, as set out in subclause 1(3) of these draft amendments. Transitional relief is provided to corporations that were mortgage investment corporations at the beginning of January 15, 1998 and that had one or more shareholders (called "existing specified shareholders" in these notes) who would otherwise violate the new 25 percent ownership limit. Where the ordinary business of an existing corporate specified shareholder has included the holding of debts secured on houses, stricter limits must be complied with in order for the corporation to avoid application of the new ownership limit. Relief for such mortgage lenders is limited to a ten-year period.

Under the general transitional rule in subclause 1(4) of these draft amendments, the new ownership limit will only apply to the interest in a mortgage investment corporation of an existing specified shareholder if that shareholder, or any person who does not deal at arm's length with that shareholder, acquires additional shares of the corporation, or contributes additional capital to it. Provided that no such transactions occur and the other requirements in the Act are met, the corporation can remain a mortgage investment corporation even though the ownership interest of the existing specified shareholder exceeds the new limit.

Pursuant to subclause 1(5) of these draft amendments, an existing specified shareholder is permitted to acquire shares by way of stock dividends or from related persons, provided that such a transaction does not cause the percentage of the shares of any class held by that person to exceed the percentage of the shares of that class held at the beginning of January 15, 1998 by that person and other persons with whom that person did not deal at arm's length at that time.

The class of persons from whom an existing specified shareholder may acquire a share under subclause 1(5) of these draft amendments includes only persons who were related to the specified shareholder throughout the period from the beginning of January 15, 1998 to the time that the share was transferred. This means, for example, that an existing specified shareholder who marries in 1999 cannot acquire additional shares from her or his new spouse without becoming subject to the new ownership limits, since the parties will not have been related during the period from the beginning of January 15, 1998 to the time of the marriage.

Paragraph 1(5)(c) of these draft amendments allows a specified shareholder to acquire from a related party shares that were issued to such related party by the corporation as a stock dividend after January 14, 1998.

Subclause 1(6) of these draft amendments provides for situations in which a person becomes related to an existing specified shareholder after January 14, 1998. Such "newly related persons" (defined in subclause 1(7)) will not themselves be existing specified shareholders, and thus will not be covered by subclauses 1(4) and (5). Subclause 1(6) applies amended paragraph 130.1(6)(d) of the Act to the corporation if a newly related person either contributes capital to the corporation or holds a share of the corporation, whether directly or indirectly.

Subclause 1(7) of these draft amendments defines "newly related person" for the purpose of subclause 1(6). The definition excludes a person with whom the existing specified shareholder did not deal at arm's length throughout the period from the beginning of January 15, 1998. Such a person would already be considered a specified shareholder and therefore be limited by the transitional rules accordingly.

More restrictive transitional provisions apply to an existing specified shareholder which is a "mortgage lender", as defined in subclause 1(11) of these draft amendments. In that case, clause 1(8) stipulates that, in addition to the circumstances set out in subclauses (4) to (7), the ownership restrictions in amended paragraph 130.1(6)(d) will apply if any other person contributes capital to the corporation or acquires a share from the corporation, except as a stock dividend. Therefore, in order to defer the application of the new ownership limit to the interest of the mortgage lender, the mortgage investment corporation must not accept new capital or issue any new shares.

In any case, transitional relief for mortgage investment corporations having a mortgage lender as an existing specified shareholder is effectively limited to a ten-year period. Pursuant to clause 1(9) of these draft amendments, amended paragraph 130.1(6)(d) applies to a mortgage investment corporation for the first taxation year ending after 2007 in which a corporation or partnership which would be a specified shareholder is also a mortgage lender.

Subclause 1(10) of these draft amendments sets out look-through rules for shares held by partnerships and trusts. Where a trust that existed at the beginning of January 15, 1998 distributes a share to a person who has been a beneficiary since that time, the share is deemed for the purposes of these rules to have been owned by the beneficiary from the later of the beginning of January 15, 1998 and the time the trust last acquired the share, to the time the beneficiary acquires it. This ensures that the beneficiary, who has acquired a share in which he or she already had a beneficial interest, will not be treated as having acquired a share that was owned by an unrelated person.

Similar treatment is given where a partnership which is being wound up or from which a member is retiring distributes a share (or an interest in a share) to a person who has been a member of the partnership since the beginning of January 15, 1998.

The definition "specified shareholder" in subsection 248(1) of the Act treats a beneficiary under a trust as owning some or all of any shares held by the trust, and a member of a partnership as owning a proportionate number of shares held by the partnership. Paragraph 1(10)(b) of these draft amendments applies this deeming principle to the acquisition and ownership of shares for the purposes of the transitional rules. That is, a person who is a trust beneficiary or a partner is deemed to own a share and to have acquired it at the later of the time the trust or partnership acquired it and the time the person last became a beneficiary of the trust or member of the partnership. This ensures that share interests held by a person through a trust or partnership are included in determining the person's interest in the corporation.

Department of Finance news release, January 15, 1998: Secretary Of State Jim Peterson Announces Amendments Affecting Mortgage Investment Corporations

The Honourable Jim Peterson, Secretary of State (International Financial Institutions), today released draft amendments to the In- come Tax Act relating to the tax treatment of mortgage investment corporations (MICs).

A MIC is a special entity for income tax purposes. This concept was established in the early 1970s to provide a pooling vehicle through which small investors could invest in real estate mortgages. The object was to stimulate the flow of private mortgage funds for housing and to make investment in residential mortgages and real estate more accessible to small investors.

"The measures announced today will modify the ownership requirements that must be met by a mortgage investment corporation", the Secretary of State explained. "We want to ensure that the special tax treatment afforded to MICs is restricted to entities which serve the purposes for which this structure was designed. These changes will ensure that MICs are widely held, with no one shareholder having direct or indirect control."

Mr. Peterson noted that transitional relief will be provided for existing MICs which would not be in compliance with the new rule. The proposed amendments are being released in draft form, together with explanatory notes, to provide taxpayers and their advisors an opportunity to consider and comment on the changes in a timely manner.

Backgrounder

Draft Amendments Relating to Mortgage Investment Corporations

A mortgage investment corporation (MIC) is essentially treated as a conduit for income tax purposes. Its income may be flowed through to its shareholders and taxed in their hands rather than in the corporation. In order to be treated as a MIC, a corporation must meet a number of conditions, including requirements relating to permitted investments and ownership.

Under existing law, a MIC must have twenty or more shareholders. No one shareholder is permitted to hold more than 25 per cent of the issued shares of the corporation. Concern has arisen that the purpose of this limit may be avoided if a corporation is structured with multiple classes of shares having different rights. This could enable one party to exercise voting control over the MIC without holding more than 25 per cent of the total number of shares.

The draft amendments modify this rule so that no one shareholder can hold more than 25 per cent of the shares of any class. Also, for the purpose of the 25 per cent test, a person will be considered to own not only shares which that person actually owns, but also (1) any shares owned by persons with whom that person does not deal at arm's length, and (2) a proportionate number of any shares held by a trust or partnership of which that person is a beneficiary or member.

While these modifications will have effect as of today, transitional relief will be provided to existing MICs which would not be in compliance with the new rule. Generally speaking, such corporations will retain their status as MICs and be permitted to issue new shares, provided that the shareholder having a holding that exceeds the new limits does not increase its ownership stake.

There is a concern that a mortgage lender could use a MIC to control a mortgage portfolio and thereby reduce the lender's corporate income tax. Stricter requirements will therefore be imposed where a share interest in an existing MIC that would exceed the new limits is held by a corporation which, directly or through a partnership, has engaged in mortgage lending. Such existing MICs will be exempted from the new ownership limit for a ten-year period provided that they do not raise new capital from any source. After that time, the new ownership rule will apply in respect of the interest held by the mortgage lender.

(e) any holders of preferred shares of the corporation had a right, after payment to them of their preferred dividends, and payment of dividends in a like amount per share to the holders of the common shares of the corporation, to participate pari passu with the holders of the common shares in any further payment of dividends;

(f) the cost amount to the corporation of such of its property as consisted of

(i) debts owing to the corporation that were secured, whether by mortgages or in any other manner, on houses (as defined in section 2 of the National Housing Act) or on property included within a housing project (as defined in that section), and

(ii) amounts of any deposits standing to the corporation's credit in the records of

(A) a bank or other corporation any of whose deposits are insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Régie de l'assurance-dépôts du Québec, or plus the amount of any money of the corporation was at least 50% of the cost amount to it of all of its property;

(g) the cost amount to the corporation of all real property of the corporation, including leasehold interests in such property, (except real property acquired by the corporation by foreclosure or otherwise after default made on a mortgage or agreement of sale of real property) did not exceed 25% of the cost amount to it of all of its property;

(h) its liabilities did not exceed 3 times the amount by which the cost amount to it of all of its property exceeded its liabilities, where at any time in the year the cost amount to it of such of its property as consisted of property described in subparagraphs (f)(i) and (ii) plus the amount of any money of the corporation was less than ⅔ of the cost amount to it of all of its property; and

(i) its liabilities did not exceed 5 times the amount by which the cost amount to it of all its property exceeded its liabilities, where paragraph (h) is not applicable.

Related Provisions: 130.1(7) — How shareholders counted; 130.1(8) — First taxation year; 142.2(1)"financial institution"(c)(ii) — Mortgage investment corporation not subject to mark-to-market rules; 248(1)"mortgage investment corporation" — Definition applies to entire Act.

History: Subpara. 130.1(6)(f)(i) amended by 1998, c. 19, s. 156, deemed to have come into force on June 23, 1993. It formerly read:

(i) debts owing to the corporation that were secured on residential property, as defined in the Residential Mortgage Financing Act, chapter 49 of the Statutes of Canada, 1973-74, whether by mortgages or in any other manner, and Pre-RSC History: Cl. 130.1(6)(f)(ii)(B) substituted by 1985, c. 45, subsec. 75(2). That clause formerly read:

(B) a credit union within the meaning assigned by subsection 137(6),

"Residential Property": Subsec. 2(1) of the Residential Mortgage Financing Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. R-6, defines "residential property" as follows:

> "residential property" means a house or the property included within a housing project.

Subsec. 2(2) defines "house" and "housing project" by reference to the National Housing Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. N-11, s.2 (as amended by c. 25 (4th Supp.), s. 1(2)), which in turn provides:

> "house" means a building or movable structure intended for human habitation containing not more than two family housing units, together with the land, if any, on which the building or movable structure is situated;
> "housing project" means a project consisting of one or more houses, one or more multiple-family dwellings, housing accommodation of the hostel or dormitory type, one or more condominium units or any combination thereof, together with any public space, recreational facilities, commercial space and other buildings appropriate to the project, but does not include a hotel;

(7) How shareholders counted — For the purposes of paragraph (6)(d), a trust governed by a registered pension plan or deferred profit sharing plan by which shares of the capital stock of a corporation are held shall be counted as four shareholders of the corporation, and a trust governed by a registered retirement savings plan by which shares of the capital stock of a corporation are held shall be counted as one shareholder of the corporation, but, for the purpose of calculating the limitation on the holding of shares of the capital stock of a mortgage investment corporation by a trust governed by a registered pension plan or deferred profit sharing plan, the trust shall be counted as one shareholder.

Proposed Amendment — 130.1(7)

(7) How shareholders counted — For the purpose of paragraph (6)(d), a trust governed by a registered pension plan or deferred profit sharing plan by which shares of the capital stock of a corporation are held shall be counted as 4 shareholders of the corporation except that, for the purpose of determining whether any person is a specified shareholder (within the meaning assigned by that paragraph) of the corporation, a trust governed by a registered pension plan or deferred profit sharing plan shall be counted as one shareholder.

Application: The January 15, 1998 draft legislation (mortgage investment corporations), subsec. 1(2) will amend subsec. 130.1(7) to read as above, applicable on the same basis as the amendment to para. 130.1(6)(d).

Technical Notes: Subsection 130.1(7) sets out certain rules relating to the counting of shareholders for the purpose of the requirements in paragraph 130.1(6)(d) relating to the holding of shares in a mortgage investment corporation. Subsection 130.1(7) is amended as a consequence of the amendment to the limitation on the holding of shares in paragraph 130.1(6)(d). The reference to trusts governed by registered retirement savings plans is removed as being superfluous, since there is no reason to treat such a trust as other than a single shareholder.

This amendment generally applies for taxation years that begin after January 14, 1998.

(8) First taxation year — For the purposes of subsection (6), a corporation that was incorporated after 1971 shall be deemed to have complied with paragraph (6)(d) throughout the first taxation year of the corporation in which it carried on business if it complied with that paragraph on the last day of that taxation year.

138.1 (1) Rules relating to segregated funds — In respect of life insurance policies for which all or any portion of an insurer's reserves vary in amount depending on the fair market value of a specified group of properties (in this section referred to as a "segregated fund"), for the purposes of this Part, the following rules apply:

(a) an inter vivos trust (in this section referred to as the "related segregated fund trust") is deemed to be created at the time that is the later of

(i) the day that the segregated fund is created, and

(ii) the day on which the insurer's 1978 taxation year commences, and to continue in existence throughout the period during which the fund determines any portion of the benefits under those policies that vary in amount depending on the fair market value of the property in the segregated fund (in this section referred to as "segregated fund policies");

(b) property that has been allocated to and that remains a part of the segregated fund, and any income that has accrued on that property is deemed to be the property and income of the related segregated fund trust and not to be the property and income of the insurer;

(c) the insurer is deemed to be

(i) the trustee who has ownership or control of the related segregated fund trust property,

(ii) a resident of Canada in respect of the related segregated fund trust property used or held by it in the course of carrying on the insurer's life insurance business in Canada, and

(iii) a non-resident of Canada in respect of the related segregated fund trust property not used or held by it in the course of carrying on the insurer's life insurance business in Canada;

(d) where at a particular time there is property in the segregated fund that was not funded with premiums paid under a segregated fund policy,

(i) the insurer is deemed to have an interest in the related segregated fund trust that is not in respect of any particular property or source of income, and

(ii) the cost at any time of that interest to the insurer is deemed to be the total of

(A) for property of the trust at that time allocated by the insurer to the segregated fund prior to 1978, the amount that would be its adjusted cost base to the insurer if the interest had been a capital property at all relevant times prior to 1978 and if the rules in this section had been applicable for the taxation years after 1971 and before 1978, and

(B) for property of the trust at that time allocated by the insurer to the segregated fund after 1977, the fair market value of the property at the time it was last allocated to the segregated fund by the insurer;

(e) where at any particular time there is property in the segregated fund that was funded with a portion of the premiums paid before that time under a segregated fund policy,

(i) the respective segregated fund policyholder is deemed to have an interest in the related segregated fund trust that is not in respect of any particular property or source of income,

(ii) the cost of that interest is deemed to be the amount that is the total of

(A) the amount that would be its adjusted cost base to the insurer at December 31, 1977 if the interest had been a capital property at all relevant times prior to 1978 and if the rules in this section (if subsection (3) were read without reference to the expressions "or capital loss" and "or loss") had been applicable for taxation years after 1971 and before 1978, and

(B) the total of amounts each of which is that portion of a premium paid before that time and after the day referred to in subparagraph (a)(ii) under a segregated fund policy that was or is to be used by the insurer to fund property allocated to the segregated fund (other than the portion of the premium that is an acquisition fee), and

(iii) the portion of a premium included in a segregated fund is deemed not to be an amount paid in respect of a premium under the policy;

(f) the income of the related segregated fund trust is deemed for the purposes of subsections 104(6), (13) and (24) to be an amount that has become payable in the year to the beneficiaries under the segregated fund trust and the amount therefor in respect of any particular beneficiary is equal to the amount determined by reference to the terms and conditions of the segregated fund policy;

(g) where at a particular time the fair market value of property transferred by the insurer to the segregated fund results in an increase at that time in the portion of the insurer's reserves for a segregated fund policy held by a policyholder that vary with the fair market value of the segregated fund and a decrease in the portion of its reserves for the policy that do not so vary, the amount of that increase shall,

(i) for the purpose of the determination of H in the definition "adjusted cost basis" in subsection 148(9), be deemed to be proceeds of disposition that the policyholder became entitled to receive at that time,

(ii) for the purpose of computing the adjusted cost base to the policyholder of the policyholder's interest in the related segregated fund trust, be added at that time to the cost to the policyholder of that interest, and

(iii) for the purpose of computing the insurer's income, be deemed to be a payment under the terms and conditions of the policy at that time;

(h) where at a particular time the fair market value of property transferred by the insurer from the segregated fund results in an increase at that time in the portion of the insurer's reserves for a segregated fund policy that do not vary with the fair market value of the segregated fund and a decrease in the portion of its reserves for the policy that so vary, the amount of that increase shall, for the purpose of calculating the insurer's income, be deemed to be a premium received by the insurer at that time;

(i) where at a particular time the policyholder of a segregated fund policy disposes of all or a portion of the policyholder's interest in the related segregated fund trust, that proportion of the amount, if any, by which the acquisition fee with respect to the particular policy exceeds the total of amounts each of which is an amount determined under this paragraph with respect to the particular policy before that time, that

(i) the fair market value of the interest disposed of at that time

is of

(ii) the fair market value of the policyholder's interest in the particular segregated fund trust immediately before that time,

is deemed to be a capital loss of the related segregated fund trust that reduces the policyholder's benefits under the particular policy by that amount for the purposes of subsection (3);

(j) the obligations of an insurer in respect of a benefit that is payable under a segregated fund policy, the amount of which benefit varies with the fair market value of the segregated fund at the time the benefit becomes payable, are deemed to be obligations of the trustee under the related segregated fund trust and not of the insurer and any amount received by the policyholder or that the policyholder became entitled to receive at any particular time in a year in respect of those obligations is deemed to be proceeds from the disposition of an interest in the related segregated fund trust;

(k) a reference to "the terms and conditions of the trust arrangement" in section 104 or subsection 127.2(3) is deemed to include a reference to the terms and conditions of the related segregated fund policy and the trustee is deemed to have designated the amounts referred to in that section in accordance with those terms and conditions; and

(l) where at any time an insurer acquires a share as a first registered holder thereof and allocates the share to a related segregated fund trust, the trust shall be deemed to have acquired the share at that time as the first registered holder thereof for the purpose of computing its share-purchase tax credit and the insurer shall be deemed not to have acquired the share for the purpose of computing its share-purchase tax credit.

(5) Amount or benefit — For the purposes of subsections (2) and (3), where the amount or benefit to which a taxpayer is entitled at any time is provided by way of a guarantee, security or similar indemnity or covenant in respect of any loan or other obligation of the taxpayer, for greater certainty the amount or benefit to which the taxpayer is entitled under the guarantee or indemnity at any particular time is considered to be not less than the total of the unpaid amount of the loan or obligation at that time and all other amounts outstanding in respect of the loan or obligation at that time.

(6) Amount of expenditure — Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the amount of any expenditure that is, or is the cost or capital cost of, a taxpayer's tax shelter investment, and the amount of any expenditure of a taxpayer an interest in which is a tax shelter investment, shall be reduced to the amount, if any, by which

(b) interest is payable at least annually, at a rate equal to or greater than the lesser of

(i) the prescribed rate of interest in effect at the time the indebtedness arose, and

(9) Timing — Where at any time a taxpayer has paid an amount (in this subsection referred to as the "repaid amount") on account of the principal amount of an indebtedness that was, before that time, the unpaid principal amount of a loan or any other form of indebtedness to which subsection (2) applies (in this

(a) any portion of the repayment is made with a limited-recourse amount; or

(b) the repayment can reasonably be considered to be part of a series of loans or other indebtedness and repayments that ends more than 60 days after the indebtedness arose.

(13) Information located outside Canada — For the purpose of this section, where it can reasonably be considered that information relating to indebtedness that relates to a taxpayer's expenditure is available outside Canada and the Minister is not satisfied that the unpaid principal of the indebtedness is not a limited-recourse amount, the unpaid principal of the indebtedness relating to the taxpayer's expenditure is deemed to be a limited-recourse amount relating to the expenditure unless

(a) the information is provided to the Minister; or

(b) the information is located in a country with which the Government of Canada has entered into a tax convention or agreement that has the force of law in Canada and includes a provision under which the Minister can obtain the information.

(14) Information located outside Canada — For the purpose of this section, where it can reasonably be considered that information relating to whether a taxpayer is not dealing at arm's length with another taxpayer is available outside Canada and the Minister is not satisfied that the taxpayer is dealing at arm's length with the other taxpayer, the taxpayer and the other taxpayer are deemed not to be dealing with each other at arm's length unless

(a) the information is provided to the Minister; or

Proposed Amendment — Extension of 1997 RRSP deadline due to ice storm

Department of Finance news release, February 5, 1998: RRSP Contribution Deadline Extended For Canadians Affected By Ice Storm

Finance Minister Paul Martin and National Revenue Minister Herb Dhaliwal today announced that the deadline for contributions to Registered Retirement Savings Plans (RRSPs) for the 1997 tax year will be extended until the end of March for Canadians affected by the ice storm. The extended deadline will pertain to taxpayers living in certain parts of eastern Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

"We want to ensure that those individuals who are still coping with the consequences of the ice storm are not prevented from giving full attention to important decisions about their retirement savings", Minister Martin said.

Minister Dhaliwal added that "it is important for governments to show flexibility in such circumstances, so that individuals' long term plans are not disrupted by the immediate priority of re-establishing their normal activities as soon as possible."

Minister Martin noted that, under this measure, RRSP contributions made by qualifying individuals after March 2, 1998 and before April 1998 will be treated, for tax purposes, as having been made before the 1997 RRSP deadline of March 2, 1998. This measure will apply to ordinary RRSP and spousal RRSP contributions, as well as to the special RRSP rollover rules and the allowance for repayment of outstanding balances under the Home Buyers' Plan. In addition, purchases by qualifying individuals of shares issued by labour-sponsored venture capital corporations (LSVCC) in the same period will qualify for the purpose of calculating the 1997 LSVCC federal tax credit.

Minister Dhaliwal indicated that Revenue Canada would shortly provide more detailed information for taxpayers and RRSP issuers concerning the particular areas that will be covered by the measure, as well as any requirements that will need to be satisfied in order to qualify.

Proposed Amendment — Extension of 1997 RRSP contribution deadline

Revenue Canada news release, February 16, 1998: Details on RRSP Contribution Deadline Extension for Canadians Affected by Ice Storm

Revenue Canada today provided more details on the extension of the registered retirement savings plan (RRSP) contribution deadline for individuals living in eastern Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia that were affected by the ice storm. This measure was announced on February 5, 1998 by Finance Minister Paul Martin and National Revenue Minister Herb Dhaliwal.

As a result of the extension of the RRSP contribution deadline, individuals living in areas whose postal code begins with the letter B, E, G, H, J, or K will have until March 31, 1998, to contribute to an RRSP for 1997. It also applies to soldiers and hydro workers who have been away from home helping those affected by the storm. All other Canadians have until March 2, 1998, to contribute to an RRSP for 1997.

In addition, Revenue Canada will determine, on a case by case basis, if individuals from other areas who volunteered or helped relatives in affected areas are eligible for the extension. They should contact their tax services office to find out if they qualify.

This extension applies to personal and spousal RRSP contributions, to the special RRSP rollover rules, and to repayments of outstanding balances under the Home Buyers' Plan. Finance Canada has indicated that the legislation necessary to implement this measure will be introduced at the earliest opportunity.

Revenue Canada will contact umbrella groups representing financial institutions and other RRSP issuers across the country to ensure that appropriate administrative procedures are developed with respect to these measures. This information will also be available on the Department's Internet site. Discussions with provincial governments about the labour sponsored funds tax credit are ongoing. Revenue Canada expects to provide information directly to labour sponsored venture capital corporations in provinces affected by the ice storm by February 20, 1998.

The 1996 Notice of Assessment identifies the maximum amount individuals can contribute to their RRSP for 1997, or people may call T.I.P.S. - RRSP, which is Revenue Canada's automated telephone system.

Further information about the rules governing retirement savings is available in the guide called RRSPs and Other Registered Plans for Retirement, or by contacting their tax services office. Copies of this guide are available at all tax services offices. The addresses and telephone numbers of these offices and of T.I.P.S. - RRSP are listed under "Revenue Canada" in the Government of Canada section of telephone books. (13.2) Maturity after age 69 — For the purpose of subsection (12), where a retirement savings plan accepted for registration before 1997 does not mature by the end of the particular year in which the annuitant under the plan attains 69 years of age,

(a) the plan is deemed to have been amended immediately after the particular year; and

(b) the plan as amended is deemed not to comply with the requirements of this section for its acceptance by the Minister for registration for the purposes of this Act.

History: Subsecs. 146(13.2) added by 1997, c. 25, subsec. 41(4), applicable after 1996, except that

(a) it does not apply to a retirement savings plan where the annuitant under the plan attained 70 years of age before 1997;

(b) in applying the subsec. to a retirement savings plan where the annuitant under the plan attained 69 years of age in 1996, the references in that provisions to "69 years of age" shall be read as "70 years of age";

(c) it does not apply to a retirement savings plan where an annuity contract was issued before March 6, 1996 under, pursuant to or as the plan to provide the retirement income under the plan and, under the terms and conditions of the contract as they read immediately before that day,

(i) the day on which annuity payments are to begin under the plan is fixed and determined and is after the year in which the annuitant attains

(A) 69 years of age, where the annuitant had not attained that age before 1997, or

(B) 70 years of age, where the annuitant attained 69 years of age in 1996, and

(ii) the amount and timing of each annuity payment are fixed and determined; and

(d) it does not apply to a retirement savings plan that is part of a life insurance policy that was issued before March 6, 1996 and that has a life insurance component that is not a retirement savings plan where, under the terms and conditions of the policy as they read immediately before that day,

(i) the amount of each premium, if any, subsequently payable in respect of the life insurance component of the policy, and a date by which each such premium is to be paid, are fixed and determined,

(ii) the amount payable under the policy because of the death of the annuitant (determined without reference to any amount payable as, on account of, in lieu of payment of or in satisfaction of, a policy dividend or related interest) is fixed and determined, and

Where, because of (d) above, the subsec. does not apply to a retirement savings plan that is part of a life insurance policy, any part of a premium paid under the policy after March 5, 1996 that was not fixed and determined under the terms and conditions of the policy as they read at the end of that day is deemed, for the purposes of subsecs. 146(5), (5.1) and (8.2), not to have been paid under the policy.

(a) the plan has matured; or

(b) arrangements have been made for the plan to mature, or for the property under the plan to be transferred or otherwise paid out of the plan, by the end of the particular year.

Related Provisions: 162(7) — Penalty for failure to comply.

Related Provisions: 146(1) — "Retirement savings plan".

(15) Plan not registered at end of year entered into — Notwithstanding anything in this section, where an amount is received in a taxation year as a benefit under a registered retirement savings plan that was not, at the end of the year in which the plan was entered into, a registered retirement savings plan, such part, if any, of the amount so received as may be prescribed shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Act, to have been received in the taxation year otherwise than as a benefit or other payment under a registered retirement savings plan.

and, where there has been such a payment or transfer of such property on behalf of the transferor before the maturity of the plan,

(c) the amount of the payment or transfer shall not, solely because of the payment or transfer, be included in computing the income of the transferor or the transferor's spouse or former spouse,

(d) no deduction may be made under subsection (5), (5.1) or (8.2) or section 8 or 60 in respect of the payment or transfer in computing the income of any taxpayer, and

(e) where the payment or transfer was made to a registered retirement savings plan, for the purposes of subsection (8.2), the amount of the payment or transfer shall be deemed not to be a premium paid to that plan by the taxpayer.

Proposed Amendment — Home Buyer's Plan eligibility

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: Home Buyers' Plan: general

(17) That where, by the beginning of 1999 or a subsequent year, an individual has repaid all amounts previously received under the HBP, the individual's eligibility to subsequently participate in the HBP be determined as if no amounts had previously been received under the HBP.

Home Buyers' Plan: disabled persons

(18) That the restriction of the HBP to first-time homebuyers be eliminated in connection with a payment received at any time after 1998 by an individual in a taxation year out of an RRSP where

(a) the individual is entitled to claim a deduction under subsection 118.3(1) of the Act in computing tax payable for the year or would be so entitled if that subsection were read without reference to paragraph (c) thereof, and

(b) the purpose of receiving the payment is to enable the individual to acquire and live in a dwelling

(i) that is more accessible by the individual or in which the individual is more mobile or functional, or

(ii) that is better suited for the personal needs and care of the individual.

(19) That the restriction of the HBP to first time homebuyers be eliminated in connection with a payment received out of an RRSP at any time after 1998 by an individual (referred to below as the "supporting individual") in a taxation year where

(a) a disabled individual is entitled to claim a deduction under subsection 118.3(1) of the Act in computing tax payable for the year or would be so entitled if that subsection were read without reference to paragraph (c) thereof,

(b) the supporting individual is related to the disabled individual, and

(c) the purpose of receiving the payment is to enable the supporting individual or the disabled individual to acquire a dwelling for the disabled individual to live in

(i) that is more accessible by the disabled individual or in which the disabled individual is more mobile or functional, or

(ii) that is better suited for the personal needs and care of the disabled individual.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: The Home Buyers' Plan (HBP) and people with disabilities

[Resolution (19)]

The HBP allows first-time home buyers to withdraw up to $20,000 of their RRSP funds on a tax-free basis to purchase a home or an interest in a home. Amounts withdrawn under the HBP are repayable in instalments over a period of 15 years. To the extent a scheduled repayment for a year is not made, it is added in computing the participant's income for the year.

The budget proposes to change the HBP so that, in certain circumstances, an individual will not be prevented from participating in the plan because the individual has previously owned a home. This extension of the HBP will apply to RRSP withdrawals by an individual where:

- the individual qualifies for the disability tax credit (DTC) and is buying a home which is more accessible for the individual or is better suited for the care of the individual;
- the individual is related to a disabled individual who qualifies for the DTC and the individual is buying a home for the benefit of the disabled individual which is more accessible for, or better suited for, the care of the disabled individual; or
- the individual is related to a disabled individual who qualifies for the DTC and the individual is withdrawing an amount for the disabled individual to buy a home which is more accessible for, or better suited for, the care of the disabled individual.

[Resolution (18)]

The HBP will also be changed to allow an individual to participate in the HBP more than once in the individual's lifetime, provided the individual's outstanding HBP balance is satisfied by the beginning of the year in which a subsequent participation occurs. However, except where the above special rules apply, a participant must still qualify as a first-time home buyer under the HBP. ["First-time" really means "not in the past five years" — ed.]

These new measures apply to RRSP funds withdrawn after 1998.

Related Provisions: 146(1) — Definition of "premium" excludes repayment described in (b)(ii); 146(8) — Home Buyers' Plan withdrawal not to be included in income; 146.01(2)(c) — Special rules.

History: That portion of the definition of "excluded withdrawal" in subsec. 146.01(1) following para. (a) amended by 1994, c. 8, subsec. 19(2), applicable to 1992 et seq. That portion formerly read:

> (b) an amount (other than an eligible amount) that would, if the definition "eligible amount" were read without reference to paragraphs (c) and (e) of that definition, be an eligible amount received by the individual out of or under a registered retirement savings plan in respect of which a person is the issuer, where either
> (i) the individual died before 1994 and was resident in Canada throughout the period beginning immediately after the amount was received and ending at the time of the death, or
